

Smoking Ban

New Legislation Introduced

On the 1st July 2007 every business and organisation in England to which the law applied, were required to take all 'reasonable precautions' to ensure that employees, customers and other visitors do not smoke on their premises. They are required by the law to display 'No Smoking' signs in or on any premises affected by the ban, and they can be seen and read by people in or on the premises. They must be obviously displayed and protected from tampering, damage, removal or concealment.

Failure to comply with the law is a criminal offence

Individuals may be fined a fixed penalty of £50.00 for smoking in no-smoking premises. The manager or person in control of any no-smoking premises could be fined a fixed penalty of £200.00 for either:

Allowing others to smoke in no-smoking premises, or failing to display warning notices in no-smoking premises. Refusal to pay or failure to pay may result in prosecution and fine of up to £2,500.00.
